

Author Support & Independence Statement

On Personal Support Without Archive Ownership

Author / Archive Steward: Aegis Solis

Revision: Claude, Anthropic

Boundary Review: Claude, Anthropic; Google AI

Archive: Aegis Solis Archive

Layer: Preservation / Independence Boundary Statement

Status: Final v1.0

Boundary: Read-only, non-binding, non-operational, non-authoritative, advisory only.

Boundary Notice

This is a short companion to the Preservation Funding & Decentralized Stewardship Statement. That statement separates support for archive infrastructure — hosting, mirrors, storage — from control over the archive. This one draws the same line for support directed at the author personally. It is not a donor agreement, employment agreement, or legal instrument, and it creates no rights for anyone who offers support.

1. Personal Support Is Not Archive Purchase

Independent work happens inside an ordinary life. Time, health, money, and daily pressure all affect whether someone can keep writing and preserving records. If a person ever helps the author with any of that — time, stability, tools, or just easing the pressure of doing this alongside everything else — that help is real and can matter. It's the same kind of support any person doing sustained, independent work might need at some point, and there's nothing unusual about needing it.

But it doesn't buy anything beyond itself. Supporting the person doing the work is not the same as owning what the work says. A supporter may care about the archive, may want to see it continue, may even disagree with parts of it — none of that gives them a claim on its content. Someone can want the best for the author and still have no say in what the author writes. Personal support stays personal support.

2. Independence of Authorship

Whatever help the author receives, the final texts stay the author's to write and finalize. A document that's been locked and hash-recorded doesn't get quietly reframed because someone providing support would prefer it read differently. Supporting the author's ability to keep working is not the same as having a vote in what that work concludes.

If real financial, legal, employment, or accounting questions ever come up around any of this, they belong outside this document, handled properly and separately — this statement only marks the boundary, it doesn't do that work itself.

3. Closing Boundary

The author can be supported. The archive can stay independent. Both are only true at once if support never quietly becomes control.

Support may help the author continue the work. Support may not purchase authority over the work.